Projects In Mumbai - By Government Official On an afternoon in November 1993, a white man wearing a baseball cap and a white turtleneck walked into the office of Larry Thompson of the Houston sports radio station KUOW. Over the radio, he was playing the role of the listener who wanted to hear a good story and a great conversation about sports. "You might have to call me Larry in Houston," he said, in a tone that seemed designed to impress and amuse. "And don't do this." His voice, which was thick as an iron skillet and inordinately long, was punctuated by the occasional, muffled slur. This guy was not a sports reporter—and Thompson knew it—but in this room, in a place where sports journalists were all old men, we had our story. "A young man from Iowa," Thompson said he had heard Thompson tell about the young Iowa boy at the center of this story:.

The kid had killed him, in his own backyard. He shot at his mother, her daughters and their friends. He didn't even take his own life, just as he had done in Iowa. And when the police found the shotgun shell, he was in such bad shape, not a day after he'd murdered his mother, that a medical officer in Cleveland had to get him out of surgery.
